

It is argued that the higher secondary school should include in their curriculum ^{money} management as it is effective to be triumphant in life. I wholly agree with this point of view because it will enable the students to save their money and use it in their future.

To begin with, money management is a pivotal technique that can have usefulness in each and everyone's life. If it starts at teenage, students will comprehend the value of money and can effortlessly implement it in their life. In the contemporary era the youngsters get pocket money, so if they are taught how to use it and save, it can aid them in brighter future without struggle. For instance - we can witness on the television that how children in the foreign countries apply innovative skill to make money and enhance their business.

Moving ahead, if we incessantly educate the children the financial topics in the young age they will naturally come up with importance of financial literacy. that moreover it will add up to the financial literacy rate in generations to come. Furthermore, with the basic education, the knowledge of money can eradicate the poverty of any nation. For example - I myself apply this on my children by giving them certain amount of money to purchase, which has developed in them the calculation of money that is saved, and the rest amount, I ask them to save in their piggy bank.

To conclude, I accept that if the financial powers is introduced in the school pupils will attain the awareness of handling money; moreover it can give the financial security and freedom in their future.