Some museums levy admission charges while others are free. I would like to support the advantages of charging and would subsequently discuss in this essay.

As museums are very often owned by local urban bodies or at times by private players. They are often required to provide and maintain basic necessities such as access to drinking water, toilets, parkings etcetra. The admission fees charged upon proves to be sustainable solution for such facilities.

In order to increase the number of antiques or at times some antiques quite often require special repairs and maintenance a hefty amount is required for such cases. Thus, the amount collected from admission charges can be utilised for better prospects.

visit museums and also wish to have a picnic around the premises. Here, in order to maintain the lawns or gardens along with the salaries of the gardner and supporting staff the revenue collected from admission fees can prove to be an important contributor.

Conclusively, a museum is an public place where people from varied interests and backgrounds often visit during there leisure times. The museums with limited sources of income should definitely charge admission fees and utilize them for the benefit of the public by increasing the level of services. The other advantage being making them financially sustainable thus retaining there financial autonomy.
