All high school students should be taught how to manage money because it is a skill necessary for succeeding in life. Do you agree or disagree?

Some people argue that the financial management courses should be added to the curriculum of the high school students as it would be helpful during their course of life.

I totally agree to this as learning a new skill at an earlier stage will help in shaping their future in a better way.

Firstly, learning new skills at school is beneficial because brain has more capacity to learn more effectively at younger age. Moreover, money handling is an important skill which will help every individual in their future growth. For example, along with subjects like moral values, life sciences, etc., money management can be added to the curriculum which will not only help juveniles to spend money rightly but also it can result into a great career opportunity for some.

Secondly, it has been experienced that most of the students start working at a younger age. Money handling skill can help these kids in managing their hard earned money in a right way. If they would not be taught about the same at school level, they might end up spending all their money on unessential items. For example, in my brother's school they are taught about financial management which made him more interested in investment ideas and making more money out of it. He also helps my family members in managing their finances in a profitable way.

In conclusion, I believe budgeting is a life skill that will benefit everyone at every stage of their life. Learning a new skill at school level can always be fruitful and with money management skills one can learn to prioritize their expenses from their younger age itself.
