Some people believe that studying at a college or university is the best route to a successful career while others believe it is better to get a job straight after high-school.

Discuss both views & give your opinion.

⇒ It is argued by a lot of people that pursuing an occupation right after school leads to a prosperous career while others advocate that attending a higher education institute is the key to a booming career. While employment can help you gain life experiences along with financial independence, I believe, an advance degree will not only give you an easy access to the job market but, also it will help in choosing the right career path.

To begin with, because of employment after high school, there is a steady cash flow which makes you independent both financially and personally. In addition to that, people gain real life experience by getting exposed to other people that come from different walks of life, which can help them in climbing the success ladder. To elaborate, my best friend joined as a customer care representative after school. After 5 years of experience and hard work, he is leading a team of 20 people to success.

On the other hand, with a structured syllabus at a university, choosing the right career path becomes easy, as the person is exposed to the various courses. Due to a profession of choice, the person tends to excel as they enjoy the work. Along with this, college opens the path to unmet opportunities through the networking that develops and the employment and placement cell of the university holding on-campus job fairs. For example, My colleague, who works as a cyber security consultant, used to work as a software engineer. Through college, he was able to identify his interest and passion and pursued a profession of his choice. In just 7 years, he is handling 5 clients.

To conclude, occupation after school has its own merits, such as personal and financial empowerment along with life molding experiences, while college gives you the ability to pursue a career of your choice and build a strong professional network for job access. In my opinion, going to a university will allow you to excel in the profession and wherever there is excellence, there is success.
