

Some people argue that preserving the ecosystem is the government's responsibility, while others say that each human being should be accountable for it. In my opinion, it is both the duty of both the human beings and regulatory bodies for preserving the environment.

It is the government's duty because firstly, the regulatory bodies have the power to make strict laws that will be compulsory for everyone to follow. For example, if the leaders of the country make it necessary for to plant trees in front of their home it will play a vital role in preserving the atmosphere. Secondly, if the administration of the country makes it compulsory to use electronic vehicles then harmful gases will be released into the atmosphere. For instance, the emissions of dangerous gases like carbon dioxide, carbon chloride will be controlled.

On the other hand, individuals also play a major role in maintaining the ecosystem in good shape. Furthermore, If the government makes rules but it is not followed by the people of the country then it is of no use. As one of my friend didn't plant trees in front of his house when the government had made it mandatory to plant trees for everyone in entrance of their houses. Moreover, the citizens of the country have to take self initiative steps to increase the life of ecosystem. For example, they should have ~~sense~~ of common sense like how to maintain well hygienic, throw garbage in the dust bin, not to waste fuel when driving vehicles.

To conclude, to preserve the ecosystem it is ~~also~~ the duty of both the government and the human beings and they should work as a team.
