When a student does a task for being recognized, they get better results, as compared to being punished for not performing well. In my opinion, the pupils in the school should be given rewards, so that they can motivate themselves and others.

When a teacher gives punishment to students, it makes them stubborn, and it does not increases their performence. For example, in 2017 a survey was conducted, and it showed that, the pupils who were made to stand out of the class as a punishment were involved in bad habits, and their academic performance got more bad. Secondly, when teenagers are subjected to scolding, it often leads to mental depression, and it effects their career growth. For instance, in 2017, the data collected from various schools depicted that, the major reason was for childrens not doing well in studies was their lack of concentration, and they were stressed all the times.

On the other hand, when appreciations is given for a work, it boost the confidence level in a teenager, and leads to improved performence as compared to earlier performence. For example, one of my friends who was struggling with his academic scores got better results, when he saw other pupils getting rewarded for high scores. Moreover, recognisation creates competition between classmates, and they all try their best to get recognised from the teacher on the stage. For instance, in 2018, a survey was conducted, and it showed that pupils of various schools were involved less in bad activities, as the urge to come first in the class diverted the mind of youngsters to studying rather than doing appalling tasks.

To recapitulate, educational institutions should decide the level of punishment on the basis of the activity done by the student, and they should try to motivate them, so that they can perform well in their examinations.

Scanned with CamScanner